

While a town struggles...

Some Are in Florida

While Muscatine suffers through the worst economic downturn in decades, some community leaders are out of town. The multi-million dollar corporate jet belonging to Muscatine's own Grain Processing Corporation has made six trips to Florida in the last four months—where the company has no plants or branches.

All of Muscatine is tightening their belts during these tough times—especially the more than 300 workers that GPC has put on the unemployment rolls by locking out its experienced local workers. When the unemployment rate in our county is 23% higher than the rest of the state, shouldn't our corporate leaders be here putting people back to work, rather than enjoying the sun and sand in Florida?

It's time for GPC to put Muscatine first.
